SCOPUS indexed Journal

The International Journal of Asian Christianity is a peer-reviewed journal devoted to the scholarly exploration of Christianity in Asia and among Asian Christian communities dispersed globally, including in the Western hemisphere and beyond. Despite the extensive international scholarly focus on major Asian religions like Buddhism, Hinduism, and Islam, Christianity in Asia has garnered comparatively less academic interest. This journal endeavors to redress this imbalance by offering a multidisciplinary forum for scrutinizing Asian Christianity through various lenses, including sociological, anthropological, comparative religion, religious studies, theological, and historical perspectives. Moreover, it seeks to connect these inquiries with emerging themes in the social sciences, such as migration studies, identity formation, minority issues, secularization, fundamentalism, development, cultural studies, feminist perspectives, and the political dimensions of religion.

In the multifaceted tapestry of Asian societies and cultures, Christianity has intricately intertwined itself, giving rise to distinctive Christian communities marked by their own unique myths, traditions, and cultural expressions. These communities have engaged with economic and political dynamics in nuanced ways, resulting in diverse manifestations across different regions. This pioneering journal provides an unprecedented platform to explore the intricate connections between Christianity, society, culture, and history within Asian Christianity. It offers a space for in-depth examination of these rich interplays, both within their specific contexts and from a cross-cultural and interdisciplinary perspective.

Welcoming scholars from all backgrounds, the journal encourages rigorous exploration of the historical, anthropological, educational, theological, cultural, social, and political dimensions of Asian Christianity, shedding light on its profound impact on past and present Asian societies.

The Journal, besides being indexed in SCOPUS and its database, is also indexed in the following: Academic Search Complete; Academic Search Elite; Academic Search Premier, and Academic Search Ultimate.
